Hong Kong Customs uncovered the largest seahorse smuggling case in two years, recovered 75kg of smuggled goods and worth HK$1 million

Hong Kong customs officers have made their biggest seizure of endangered seahorses in two years with the arrest of a 63-year-old man during an operation against illegal wildlife trade, finding 75kg of the product valued at HK$1 million.

About 25kg of the dried seahorses were airmailed into the city from Indonesia via a logistic hub in Shenzhen and were found in a Hong Kong truck at Lok Ma Chau border checkpoint on Wednesday.

The goods were found in two boxes which were declared to be carrying body scrub, according to a customs official. The parcel was addressed to a public housing flat in Tuen Mun.

“After a follow-up investigation, a customs officer posed as a courier and delivered the consignment to the Tuen Mun premises the next day,” a law enforcement source said.

He said a 63-year-old male tenant was the consignee and was taken into custody after he received the package from the undercover agent on Thursday night.

Inside his flat, customs officers seized another four boxes that carried a total of 50kg of the dried seafood.
